Summary:

This is the second volume in a bibliographical series on Norwegian development policy and development research in the 1980s. This bibliography registers and covers evaluation studies and project-related pre-feasibility studies submitted between 1980 and 1989. The great majority of the registered reports relates to Norwegian projects, and only very few to UN or World Bank projects.

Sammendrag:

Dette er annet bind i en bibliografisk serie om norsk utviklingspolitikk og utviklingsforskning i 1980-årene. Denne bibliografien dekker evalueringsstudier og prosjekt-relaterte forundersøkelser utført mellom 1980 og 1989. De aller fleste rapportene handler om norsk-finansierte bilaterale prosjekter, men enkelte prosjekter gjennomført av FN eller av Verdensbanken er også inkludert.

Introduction

This is the second volume in a bibliographical series on Norwegian development policy and Norwegian development research in the 1980s. It represents one part of an effort to establish a sounder, more empirical and potentially, a more cumulative base for Norwegian development research. The main outcome was published as Tvedt, T., H. Brekke and E. Bråten, Norwegian development research 1980-89. A compilation of Norwegian research on Africa, Asia, Latin America and Oceania and on North-South relations. Oslo: Ad Notam, 1991. A third volume covering Norwegian aid policy papers will be published later by Chr. Michelsen Institute.

This bibliography registers and covers evaluation studies and project-related pre-feasibility studies submitted between 1980 and 1989. It includes on the one hand all such studies undertaken by Norwegians, i.e. both researchers, professional consultants and senior administrators. The great majority of the registered reports relates to Norwegian projects, however, and only very few to UN/World Bank-projects and to projects implemented by other Scandinavian countries. The bibliography also includes evaluation reports of Norwegian aid projects which are written by researchers and consultants from other countries. We have as a rule not included self-evaluation reports carried out by the organisations themselves. Studies commissioned by aid organizations are included, although they may not be evaluation studies in a strict meaning of the word, i.e. commissioned pre-feasibility studies related to project implementation.

A separate bibliography on evaluation studies is compiled in order to improve the "institutional memory" within the development aid organisations and among the evaluators themselves. In the development aid milieu and culture there is, as in most other activities, a problem with "institutional memory". This compilation and registration of evaluation reports may increase the ability to learn from past experiences or at least — if that is not possible — to reduce the chances for repeating mistakes of the past. The present bibliography might also make it easier for the "evaluators" to build upon previous findings. By employing the indexes, all reports on the same or related topics, may be detected.

Evaluation studies have played a relatively important role in Norwegian development aid and development aid debates. This bibliography, therefore, is thought necessary for and conducive to improving and broadening the scope of research on Norwegian development aid in Africa, Asia, Latin America and Oceania. It will also assist politicians, development experts, journalists etc. when seeking to understand, implement or inform about Norwegian development aid experiences and policies.

Evaluation studies is an important research topic in its own right. The implicit and explicit conceptualisations embedded in such analyses and recommendations influence, of course, not only definite Norwegian policies in other countries and cultures, but also Norwegian images of the so-called developing world. Moreover, evaluation as a practice is part of the Norwegian development research history and historiography, because the great majority of the most central Norwegian researchers — who have dealt with modern societal developments in the “developing countries” — have also carried out evaluation studies. This bibliography therefore provides data for research and debate on central problems of ethics and science, of politics and the ideal of objectivity in research, and of the distinction between the two activities of finding out what is, and advising what should be. In this bibliography the empirical growth and development of evaluation studies is documented, making analyses of such problems feasible.
